As a life-long Social Justice Advocate, Jodi's education and experience reflect her interest in a broad range of conflict situations. From race relations and resource management to restorative justice programming, Jodi has been involved in many aspects of conflict resolution.

Prior to coming to the SIDRCS, she worked at West Coast Environmental Law and was honoured to assist in some of British Columbia's more recent high profile environmental wins. As a mixed blood Cree woman, Jodi found her work with at-risk Aboriginal youth particularly rewarding. The opportunity to use modern techniques and traditional teachings was both challenging and rewarding; the experience clearly illustrated the importance of identity and tradition for today's youth.

In addition to her BA from the University of Victoria, Jodi is an ordained minister and parent to two wonderful children.
